PreSchool-Grade 2?Most children are curious about scabs, for many of them have a scab somewhere on their bodies for most of their childhood. This Japanese import explores that fascination and explains how and why scabs form. Children with orange skin discuss picking them, eating them ("YUCK!"), and wonder what they are made of. "Is it hardened blood?" Could it be the "poop of a sore?" There is no indication which words are spoken by what character. The crudely drawn art and the words are helter-skelter on the pages, giving a messy appearance. However, even though the pictures are unattractive, the diagrams are well labeled and easy to understand and the clear, conversational text explains the process very well.?Martha Gordon, formerly at South Salem Library, NYCopyright 1999 Reed Business Information, Inc.

Ages 5^8. The gang that produced Everyone Poops (1993) turns its attention to scabs. As usual, rather horrific pictures (scribbled cartoons featuring orange faces) and an often inane text ("Maybe a scab is made of something like poop that comes out of a sore") is combined with decent information about what a scab is, what causes it to form, and the function it serves for the body. As with other books in this series of Japanese imports, the topic has plenty of kid appeal, and the very grossness of the presentation just adds to the allure. Buy where previous books are popular, if you can stand hearing the giggles coming from the stacks. Coming this spring, Breasts. Ilene Cooper mid story the book got very medical and scientific. Too advanced for the recommended age and long. I'm a nurse and had to look up the word corpuscles. perhaps the recommended reading level in premed not prek, of which I did share with friends that are in medical and nursing school and they found it helpful.

Two of my daughters picked their scabs ALL THE TIME before reading this book. It is fun and educational and has been a source for establishing new, healthier habits in my 3 and 7 year old children.

I have a 6yr girl and 3yr boy and they both get a kick out of it, especially my 6yr who loves to read it over and over. Of course my boy loves to see the pictures of blood and it was quite informative as well. We have tons of books, but the 'funny' ones like this and 'The Holes in Your Nose', 'The Gas we Pass' and the 'Poop' books are the ones they always pick to read most often. I hope your kids enjoy it as well! God bless you!

I love these books and so does my son! Honest, silly discussions of the body.

Great, funny science books!

Much too mature for my granddaughter; goes in the holding shelf

Cracked me up.....
