John T. Stobb is a happily married man and father of 9. An author, illustrator and cradle Catholic raised by converts, John serves as a professional Communications and Design Consultant for Catholic parishes and schools. He is also the founder of GatherYourFlock.com, a site created for the express purpose of helping Catholic schools and parishes spread the Good News of the Gospel and the riches available through the Roman Catholic Church. John has enjoyed such colorful privileges as hosting a hard issues Catholic talk radio show, serving as a Catholic speaker on Immaculate Conception Seminary School of Theology's Speaker's Bureau, serving as a Campus Minister at Seton Hall University and volunteering at FJAC, a young adult's Catholic ministry house where he met his wife of 11 years. In addition to raising his children, John has served as a grade school teacher and taught students in ministry. He has built a career as an artist, writer and graphic designer for 14 years. He has served Fortune 500 companies, small businesses and start-ups, Seton Hall University, parishes, and non-profits, where he developed the professional skills necessary not only to serve the Catholic Church, but to effectively spread the truth in today's mediums.

The cartons will scare a young child. They looks like monsters.

Nice companion book to Let's Celebrate the Mass. To help a young child keep quiet a Mass, a few crayons could be brought to Mass and the child could color a little on each page as the Mass progressed. A parent or older child could hold the companion book to help the younger child follow along. There are also some nice at home activities for an older child such as a crossword puzzle, and some cut out figurines to allow the child to have characters to practice the Mass. A very nice learning tool to include in a parent's arsenal to make the Mass and the Faith meaningful to children. I especially like that children are depicted at times as devout, attentive, and joyful which sets great examples to follow.
